Dear Chairman Powell:

As the General Manager of a small business, I urge you to support the pending EchoStar and DirecTV merger. This is an exciting combination because of the clear benefits it will provide for consumers and retail merchants and contractors.

Retail merchants will benefit from EchoStar's upgrade plans because it will simplify their inventory and repair process by standardizing the satellite TV equipment platform. The greatest gains for retail merchants will come from EchoStar's plans to carry local broadcast channels in all 210 US television markets once the merger is completed. This means that satellite TV will be a more effective competitor to cable since consumers will now be able to get their local stations by satellite as they can currently from cable. This will put local retailers selling DBS satellite dishes on a more level playing field as they sell services that directly compete with local cable TV companies. This service improvement will mean more business for retailers and a more competitive video service for consumers from satellite television.

This merger is an economic gain for the small business community and it needs your support.

Sincerely,

Scott Miller
